INTRODUCTION

2 At issue in this case is the authority of the U.S. Border Patrol to exclude 3 unauthorized persons from the interior of traffic checkpoints—checkpoints that the 4 Supreme Court has described as “necessary” to border security. United States v.
5 Martinez-Fuerte, 428 U.S. 543, 555 (1976). Plaintiffs ask the Court to grant them
6 virtually unfettered access to the Border Patrol checkpoint outside of Amado, Arizona, 7 to protest its existence and to monitor the activities of agents working there. But the 8 “First Amendment does not guarantee access to property simply because it is owned or 9 controlled by the government.” Wright v. Incline Vill. Gen. Improvement Dist., 665 F.3d 10 1128, 1134 (9th Cir. 2011) (citation omitted). On the contrary, it is well established that 11 the “government may limit the uses of properties under its control to the uses to which 12 [they] are lawfully dedicated.” Id. (citation omitted).

13 The Border Patrol’s policy—to restrict access to the checkpoint to authorized 14 persons for official purposes—is fully consistent with the First Amendment. Border 15 Patrol checkpoints are nonpublic fora, much like airport security checkpoints, police 16 stations, and highway rest stops, where restrictions on expressive activity are subject to a 17 lenient degree of scrutiny. The purpose of Border Patrol checkpoints is to secure the 18 border, not to facilitate expression, and free public access would be incompatible with 19 their purpose. That is particularly true given the significant law enforcement and public 20 safety concerns at stake: Not only is the government’s interest in border security 21 paramount, but traffic stops are inherently dangerous, and agents must be prepared to 22 confront smugglers who have every incentive to flee. Moreover, checkpoints are clearly 23 marked with signs—“Border Patrol Checkpoint Ahead,” “All Vehicles Must Stop,” “K-9 24 on Duty”—that inform reasonable observers that they are entering a zone where free 25 passage is limited and expression may be restricted.

26 But the Court need not conclude that the Arivaca checkpoint is a nonpublic forum
27 to reject Plaintiffs’ claims. As the Court has already determined, even if the checkpoint 28 were a public forum, the Border Patrol’s “policy restricting pedestrian access to the

1 checkpoint . . . is a valid time, place, and manner restriction.” Slip op. at 20 (Doc. No.
2 54). That policy regulates only conduct, not speech, and it does not limit the public’s 3 ability to speak, picket, leaflet, or engage in any other expressive activity from outside 4 the checkpoint. Indeed, despite their assertions to the contrary, Plaintiffs have had 5 considerable success in reaching their target audience from outside the checkpoint, 6 flagging down motorists, handing out fliers, publishing reports on alleged misconduct, 7 and attracting significant media attention.

8 In short, the Court’s determination that the Border Patrol’s policy is a “valid time, 9 place, and manner restriction” effectively resolves this case. It directly resolves the 10 portion of Count One alleging an infringement of the right to monitor, to which Plaintiffs 11 purported to limit their preliminary injunction motion. It likewise resolves the remainder 12 of Count One, alleging an infringement of the right to protest, which, under forum 13 analysis, should be resolved no differently. If anything, to allow protesters within the 14 checkpoint—along with picket signs and banners—would be even more dangerous to 15 public safety and disruptive to law enforcement than to allow monitoring. Finally, 16 because the Border Patrol’s policy is valid under the First Amendment, it does not 17 infringe on protected speech, so Plaintiffs’ retaliation claim in Count Two cannot stand.
18 In any event, there is no support for Plaintiffs’ conclusory assertion that the Border 19 Patrol’s actions were intended to punish Plaintiffs for expressing their views, rather than 20 simply to prevent unauthorized persons from entering the checkpoint.

21 The Court can reach these conclusions based on the deficiencies in the complaint, 22 the documents incorporated into the complaint by reference, and judicially noticeable 23 materials, and it should therefore dismiss the case. In the alternative, should the Court 24 deny Defendants’ motion to dismiss or rely on other materials, it should grant summary 25 judgment to Defendants.

26 BACKGROUND

27 The Department of Homeland Security (“DHS”) is responsible for securing the 28 nation’s borders and enforcing its immigration laws. Those duties are divided among 1 several DHS components, including U.S. Customs and Border Protection (“CBP”).

2 Within CBP, the Office of Field Operations enforces immigration laws at ports of entry, 3 such as international airports, some seaports, and official land crossings. Another CBP
4 division, the U.S. Border Patrol—the principal Defendant here—secures the border 5 against unlawful entry between ports of entry.

6 A. The U.S. Border Patrol

7 To accomplish its mission, the Border Patrol has established three main lines of 8 defense. See GAO, Report 09-824, at 6 (2009), available at http://www.gao.gov/assets/
9 300/294548.pdf (hereinafter “GAO”). First, most agents are assigned to “line watch” 10 operations at the border, where they turn back or arrest persons attempting to cross the 11 border unlawfully. Id. Second, agents at traffic checkpoints, usually located on major 12 highways and secondary roads up to 100 miles inland, see 8 C.F.R. § 287.1(a), intercept 13 individuals who evade detection at the border and prevent them from reaching major 14 population centers. GAO at 6. Third, “roving patrols” apprehend persons who attempt to 15 circumvent these border defenses. See id. The Supreme Court has specifically endorsed 16 the role that checkpoints play in the Border Patrol’s enforcement strategy, explaining that 17 “a traffic-checking program in the interior is necessary because the flow of illegal aliens 18 cannot be controlled effectively at the border.” Martinez-Fuerte, 428 U.S. at 555.

19 B. Border Patrol Checkpoints

20 As of 2009, there were 71 Border Patrol checkpoints operating along the nation’s 21 southwest border. GAO at 8, 10. Checkpoints fall into two categories, “permanent” and 22 “tactical,” with permanent checkpoints tending to be brick-and-mortar structures on 23 major highways, and tactical checkpoints being temporary facilities on secondary roads.
24 Id. at 7. However, both types now operate from fixed locations, and there is no legal 25 distinction between the two. See United States v. Hernandez, 739 F.2d 484, 488 (9th Cir.
26 1984) (the “distinctions . . . between a temporary checkpoint and a permanent checkpoint 27 are not material”); United States v. Soto-Camacho, 58 F.3d 408, 411 (9th Cir. 1995)
28 (applying Hernandez to Border Patrol checkpoints). Even so, tactical checkpoints offer

1 fewer safety protections to Border Patrol agents and the public, particularly given their 2 lack of concrete barriers separating agents from traffic. GAO at 8.

3 Although checkpoints vary in terms of size, infrastructure, and staffing, they share 4 many common features. To begin, the approach to a checkpoint is marked with warning 5 signs in accordance with the Border Patrol's traffic control plan, devised by a federal-6 state task force in the wake of a pair of fatal checkpoint crashes in 2004. Under that plan, 7 the recommended signage on a rural, two-lane road is: at 1 mile out, "Border Patrol
8 Checkpoint 1 Mile"; at ½ mile, "Be Prepared to Stop" and "No Passing Zone"; at 1,800
9 feet, "All Vehicles Must Stop Ahead"; at 1,200 feet, "Use Low Beams"; and at 550 feet, 10 "Stop Ahead," with traffic cones or pylons along the center stripe and a stop sign at the 11 primary inspection area. See Traffic Control Plan at A-1, 2 (Defs.' Ex. A). These 12 "distances . . . may be adjusted based on field conditions" and "changeable message signs 13 . . . or other devices" including "rumble strips" may also be used. Id.

14 Within a checkpoint, Border Patrol guidelines call for a primary inspection area, 15 where motorists are initially stopped, see Traffic Checkpoint Policy ("TCP") § 6.13.3 16 (Defs.' Ex. B); a secondary inspection area, to which motorists may be referred for 17 further questioning, and which must be large enough to accommodate buses, trucks 18 hauling trailers, and other large vehicles, id. § 6.9.2; administrative and detention 19 facilities, whether brick-and-mortar buildings, mobile trailers, or other vehicles, id.
20 § 6.2.1-6.2.2; and access to water and electricity, either portable or permanent, id. § 6.2.3.
21 Checkpoints must also have a number of Border Patrol vehicles on hand—for example, to 22 chase motorists who fail to yield or who flee, id. § 6.3—and sufficient parking for agents
23 staffing the checkpoint and for agents conducting roving patrols nearby. Checkpoints 24 may also house a variety of inspection equipment, such as vehicle lifts, x-ray and gamma-25 ray machines, and canine units. GAO at 25, 50. Checkpoints must be arranged to 26 minimize the risk of accident or injury to agents and the public, and operations may be 27 suspended if conditions become unsafe. TCP § 6.13.8.

28 When operating checkpoints, Border Patrol agents act under unique legal

1 authority. Congress has empowered agents “to interrogate any alien or person believed to 2 be an alien as to his right to be or to remain in the United States,” 8 U.S.C. § 1357(a)(1), 3 and the Supreme Court has held that “a vehicle may be stopped at a fixed checkpoint for 4 brief questioning of its occupants even though there is no reason to believe the particular 5 vehicle contains illegal aliens.” Martinez-Fuerte, 428 U.S. at 545. Likewise, agents need 6 not have “individualized suspicion” to selectively refer motorists to secondary inspection 7 for further questioning about immigration matters. Id. However, referral to secondary 8 for a non-immigration purpose, such as a suspected drug or customs violation, requires 9 reasonable suspicion, see United States v. Preciado-Robles, 964 F.2d 882, 884 (9th Cir.
10 1992), and a vehicle search requires probable cause or consent, regardless of the purpose, 11 Martinez-Fuerte, 428 U.S. at 567 (citation omitted).

12 C. The Arivaca Road Checkpoint

13 The Arivaca Road checkpoint is located on a rural, two-lane county road, about 14 twenty-two miles east of Arivaca (population 700) and one mile west of Amado 15 (population 300), where the road meets Interstate 19, a major route inland. Compl. ¶¶ 27-
16 28. It has operated in the same location since 2007. Id. ¶ 31. The county transportation 17 department has authorized the Border Patrol to use the county right-of-way to establish 18 checkpoints at “various locations” on the road, and the permit does not limit the 19 boundaries of any such checkpoint. Compl. Ex. B. The Arivaca checkpoint operates 20 primarily in the eastbound direction, and serves to prevent circumvention of the I-19 21 checkpoint just south of Amado. GAO at 43 n.63. It generally operates 24 hours a day, 22 7 days a week, which “is key to effective and efficient checkpoint performance . . .
23 because smugglers and illegal aliens closely monitor potential transit routes” using 24 “sophisticated surveillance and communication technology” that “allow[s] for immediate 25 notification of security vulnerabilities, such as a checkpoint closure.” GAO at 20-21.

26 Consistent with the Border Patrol’s traffic control plan, the eastbound approach to 27 the Arivaca checkpoint is marked as follows: at about 0.4 mile out, “Border Patrol 28 Checkpoint Ahead”; at 1,350 feet, “Speed Limit 35” mph, reduced from 45 mph; at 900

1 feet, “Speed Limit 25” mph; at 600 feet, “All Vehicles Must Stop Ahead”; at 320 feet, 2 “No Passing Zone”; at 300 feet, “K-9 on Duty, Please Restrain Your Pets”; at 250 feet, 3 “Use Low Beams”; and at 180 feet, “Speed Limit 15” mph and a digital speed board, 4 with traffic cones and pylons along the center stripe beginning at 200 feet out, a series of 5 three rumble strips beginning at 110 feet out, and a stop sign at the primary inspection
6 area, in the center of the checkpoint. See McLain Decl. Ex. 2 (Pls.’ Mot. Prelim. Inj., 7 Doc. No. 29-3) (map from satellite image). Photographs of these signs, and similar ones 8 marking the westbound approach to the checkpoint, accompany the declaration of Roger 9 San Martin, the Patrol Agent in Charge of the Border Patrol’s Tucson Station. See Defs.’
10 Ex. C Attach. 1-18; see also Defs.’ Statement of Facts (“SOF”) ¶ 1.

11 At the primary inspection area, there are two plastic barricades along the center 12 stripe, where a Border Patrol agent stands. See McLain Decl. Ex. 2. On the southern 13 roadside is an 8-by-40-foot storage container used for administration, processing, and 14 detention, beside which are a canopy and a portable kennel. Id. On the northern roadside 15 are a portable lighting unit and often several Border Patrol vehicles, id., placed there to 16 encourage westbound traffic to slow to the posted speed limit in that direction (15 mph)
17 and to prevent westbound traffic from driving off the roadway to avoid the rumble strips, 18 San Martin Decl. ¶ 9. East of the primary inspection area on the southern roadside is an 19 “approximately 100-foot-long” secondary inspection area, Compl. ¶ 29, at the eastern end 20 of which is a Border Patrol sedan used to give chase, see McLain Decl. Ex. 2. Also on 21 the southern roadside are two portable lighting units, restrooms, a sink, a water tank, and 22 a variety of other equipment. See id. Additional Border Patrol vehicles, including 23 detainee transport units, are also commonly parked at the checkpoint. See San Martin 24 Decl. ¶ 23. As motorists exit the checkpoint, traffic pylons extend about 160 feet east of 25 its center. See McLain Decl. Ex. 2; see generally Defs.’ SOF ¶¶ 2-7.

26 D. Plaintiffs’ Protesting and Monitoring “Campaign”

27 Plaintiffs are two members of People Helping People (“PHP”), an advocacy group 28 that seeks to shut down the Arivaca checkpoint because of alleged civil rights abuses and

1 perceived negative effects on the surrounding community. Compl. ¶¶ 9-10, 34. To 2 accomplish that goal, PHP has conducted a “campaign” to protest the checkpoint and to 3 monitor the behavior of Border Patrol agents working there. Id. ¶ 32. On December 8, 4 2013, the group staged a rally at the checkpoint with more than 100 supporters, who 5 carried signs and banners, gave speeches, and delivered a petition calling on the Border 6 Patrol to remove the checkpoint. Id. ¶ 36. Because the presence of a large number of 7 protesters raised safety concerns, the Border Patrol closed the checkpoint for much of the 8 day—a result that PHP advertised in a press release. See Press Release, PHP, 9 Community Members Shut Down Border Patrol Checkpoint (Dec. 20, 2013), at 10 <http://phparivaca.org/?p=262>. Photographs of the rally accompany the declaration of 11 Watch Commander Stephen Spencer. See Defs.’ Ex. D Attach. 1-5.

12 The campaign continued on February 26, 2014, when PHP “initiated checkpoint 13 monitoring activities.” Compl. ¶ 42. About 30 individuals—six “monitors” with video 14 cameras and note pads, including Mr. Ragan, and two dozen “additional protesters” 15 carrying signs and banners, including Ms. Jacobson—entered the checkpoint on foot, 16 approaching from the east on the southern shoulder. Id. ¶¶ 43-45. When they were 17 “approximately 100 feet” from the center of the checkpoint, “at the eastern terminus of 18 the secondary inspection area,” id. ¶ 46—that is, about 60 feet within the checkpoint’s
19 easternmost traffic pylons, see McLain Decl. Ex. 2—they were stopped by two Border 20 Patrol agents, who asked them to move back, Compl. ¶ 46. The PHP members refused.
21 Id. ¶ 47. Twenty minutes later, Border Patrol agents again asked them to move back; 22 they again refused. Id. ¶ 48. The PHP members later agreed to cross to the northern 23 shoulder, but then attempted to move even farther inside the checkpoint and were turned 24 back. Id. ¶¶ 49-50. At that point, Border Patrol agents asked the PHP members for a 25 third time to move back; once again, they refused. Id. ¶¶ 51-52. Border Patrol agents 26 then strung yellow incident tape across the northern and southern roadside about “150 27 feet east” of the center of the checkpoint, and informed the PHP members that they would 28 be arrested if they did not move behind it. Id. ¶¶ 53-54. The PHP members then

1 relented, about two and a half hours after first entering the checkpoint. Id. ¶¶ 51, 55; see 2 also Spencer Decl. Attach. 6-7 (photos of the incident).

3 Three days later, on March 1, 2014, six unnamed PHP members (none Plaintiffs 4 here) returned to monitor the checkpoint. Compl. ¶ 59. The yellow incident tape had 5 been replaced with rope cordons and signs reading “Border Patrol Enforcement Zone—6 No Pedestrians Beyond This Point.” Id. ¶¶ 56, 57. The PHP members disregarded the 7 cordons and entered the checkpoint, stopping “approximately 100 feet” from the center of 8 the checkpoint. Id. ¶¶ 58-60. Border Patrol agents asked them to move behind the 9 cordons, but they refused. Id. ¶ 61. About an hour later, Border Patrol agents informed 10 the PHP members that they would be arrested if they did not move behind the cordons, 11 and they relented. Id. ¶ 62. Border Patrol agents parked vehicles on the northern and 12 southern shoulders, just inside the cordons, to reinforce the barriers. Compl. ¶¶ 64, 77; 13 Compl. Ex. C at 2. Photographs of this incident accompany the declaration of 14 Supervisory Border Patrol Agent Rosalinda Huey. See Defs.’ Ex. E Attach. 1-2.

15 The next month, on April 17, 2014, Plaintiffs’ counsel wrote to the head of the 16 Border Patrol’s Tucson sector, Chief Patrol Agent Manuel Padilla Jr., demanding that the 17 cordons be removed and that PHP members be given greater access to the checkpoint.
18 Compl. Ex. E. Agent Padilla responded within a week, declining to remove the cordons.
19 Compl. Ex. F. He explained that Border Patrol’s policy—to restrict access to the 20 checkpoint to authorized persons for official purposes, regardless of their political 21 beliefs—was reasonable in light of law enforcement and public safety concerns. Id.

22 Three months later, on July 11, 2014, PHP members staged a “Know Your Rights” 23 rally at the checkpoint. Compl. ¶ 87. At that time, the cordons remained in place, but the 24 accompanying signs read “No Unauthorized Entry Beyond This Point,” as they do today.
25 Id. ¶ 83. A group of protesters, including Mr. Ragan, assembled on the west side of the 26 checkpoint, while a group of “monitors,” including Ms. Jacobson, assembled on the east 27 side. Plaintiffs allege that, during the rally, Border Patrol agents allowed pedestrians and 28 members of the media to traverse the checkpoint on foot, by walking along the north

1 roadside from one side of the checkpoint to the other. Id. ¶ 87.

2 Since they began monitoring the checkpoint more than 18 months ago, Plaintiffs 3 have identified three instances in which other individuals were allegedly permitted access 4 to the checkpoint. First, on April 3, 2014, a local resident allegedly parked his truck 5 inside the cordons, where he remained for about 40 minutes. Id. ¶ 27. Second, on an 6 unspecified date, another man allegedly passed through the primary inspection area, 7 parked his car in the secondary inspection area, and walked back toward the primary 8 inspection area, where he spoke with Border Patrol agents for about 20 minutes. Id. ¶ 82.
9 Third, on November 11 and 23, 2014, the surveyor that Plaintiffs hired for this case was 10 allowed to enter the checkpoint.

11 Plaintiffs do not allege that they have ever been prevented from using cameras or 12 recording devices. Nor do they allege that any Border Patrol vehicles have entirely 13 blocked their view of the checkpoint, and the photographs attached to their complaint 14 show otherwise. See Compl. Ex. D. In fact, contrary to Plaintiffs' assertions that the 15 Border Patrol's policy has stymied their monitoring efforts, PHP published a report in 16 October 2014 documenting the perceived race of individuals who (a) passed through the 17 checkpoint; (b) showed agents some form of identification; (c) were referred to 18 secondary; or (d) were the subject of canine alerts. See Compl. ¶ 90 (quoting from PHP, 19 Community Report, at <http://phparivaca.org/?p=567>). PHP also claims to have achieved 20 many of its goals. See PHP, Checkpoint Monitoring—a Challenge and a Triumph (Mar.
21 31, 2014) (“[O]ur presence at the checkpoint is absolutely deterring abuse, which is a 22 primary goal of this effort. . . . Other goals, to engage other border communities and to 23 send a clear message that Arivacans are not afraid to resist border militarization, are 24 being accomplished.”), at <http://phparivaca.org/?p=536>.

25 E. This Action

26 Plaintiffs' complaint raises two claims. In Count One, they allege that the Border 27 Patrol's policy is an “unlawful regulation” of their First Amendment rights to protest the 28 checkpoint and to monitor the activities of Border Patrol agents working there. Compl.

1 ¶¶ 106-09. In Count Two, they allege that the Border Patrol’s actions amount to 2 “retaliation” in response to “constitutionally protected speech.” Id. ¶¶ 110-13. As relief, 3 Plaintiffs seek a declaration that the First Amendment entitles them “to protest and record 4 . . . from a reasonable distance outside the primary inspection area” at the checkpoint. Id.
5 ¶ B.2. They also seek a permanent injunction preventing the Border Patrol from 6 “interfering with [their] First Amendment rights to protest and record the [Arivaca] 7 checkpoint . . . from the public right-of-way” and “from areas where other members of 8 the public are allowed to congregate.” Id. ¶ A.1-2.

9 Plaintiffs sought a preliminary injunction granting them access to all portions of 10 the checkpoint more than “twenty feet outside of the primary and secondary inspection 11 areas,” Pls.’ Mot. Prelim. Inj. 1, asserting at oral argument that their motion sought access 12 only for purposes of monitoring, not protesting, see slip op. at 7. In denying preliminary 13 relief, the Court found it unnecessary to address the government’s argument that the 14 checkpoint was a nonpublic forum. See id. at 14. Instead, the Court held that, even 15 assuming the checkpoint were a public forum, the Border Patrol’s “policy . . . is a valid 16 time, place, and manner restriction on speech.” Id. at 20; see also id. at 19 (the “180-foot 17 enforcement zone is . . . valid”).

18 In reaching this result, the Court addressed four main issues. First, it held that the 19 Border Patrol’s policy is “content-neutral.” Id. at 16. Because the policy “applies 20 equally to Plaintiffs, cartel members who wish to obtain information regarding the 21 transport of their load, or members of the public who wish to cheer in support of the 22 checkpoint,” the “message of the speaker is irrelevant.” Id. Second, it found the 23 government’s significant interests in border security and public safety to be “undisputed.”
24 Id. at 15-17. Third, it found that the Border Patrol’s policy is narrowly tailored to serve 25 those interests. The policy creates “a safety zone for the protection of all involved”: it 26 provides a “buffer” between pedestrians and vehicle traffic; prevents pedestrians from 27 occupying the northern roadside behind armed agents, consistent with “standard weapon
28 retention techniques”; and provides parking for Border Patrol vehicles for “legitimate law

1 enforcement purposes.” Id. at 18. Moreover, because “the secondary inspection area 2 extends approximately 100 feet from the center of the checkpoint,” the eastern end of the 3 “180-foot enforcement zone” is actually only 80 feet away from the secondary inspection 4 area—much closer than the “150-foot” safety zones that the Ninth Circuit has affirmed in 5 other cases. Id. (citing United States v. Griefen, 200 F.3d 1256, 1262 (9th Cir. 2000)).
6 Fourth, the Court noted that Plaintiffs’ own submissions established that, contrary to their 7 assertions, they remain able to successfully monitor the checkpoint. Id. at 18-19.<sup>1</sup>

8 LEGAL STANDARDS

9 A motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(1) challenges the Court’s subject matter
10 jurisdiction. In reviewing a facial challenge to subject matter jurisdiction, the Court 11 accepts the well-pleaded allegations of the complaint as true, and determines whether 12 those allegations are sufficient to establish jurisdiction. Leite v. Crane Co., 749 F.3d 13 1117, 1121-22 (9th Cir. 2014). However, in assessing its jurisdiction, the Court may 14 consider extra-pleading facts, such as those set forth in declarations, and if necessary may 15 resolve disputed jurisdictional facts, without converting the motion to one for summary 16 judgment. See id.

17 To survive a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), a plaintiff’s complaint must 18 contain “enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.” Bell Atl.
19 Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570 (2007). This “plausibility” standard “asks for 20 more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully.” Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 21 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009). “Where a complaint pleads facts that are ‘merely consistent 22 with’ a defendant’s liability, it ‘stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility
23 of entitlement to relief.’” Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557). While the Court

25 <sup>1</sup> The Court rejected the government’s argument that Plaintiffs’ monitoring claims should 26 be evaluated under the “right of access” test set forth in Leigh v. Salazar, 677 F.3d 892, 27 898 (9th Cir. 2012). See slip op. at 15 n.2; Defs.’ Opp’n to Pls.’ Mot. Prelim. Inj. 23-25.
28 While the government does not concede that this was correct, it does not seek to relitigate the issue here.

1 accepts well-pleaded factual allegations as true, “mere conclusory statements” and “legal 2 conclusion[s] couched as . . . factual allegation[s]” are “disentitled to this presumption of 3 truth.” Id. (citation omitted). Although under Rule 12(b)(6) the Court generally may not 4 rely on material outside the pleadings, it may consider materials incorporated into the 5 complaint by reference, as well as judicially noticeable materials, without converting the 6 motion into one for summary judgment. Skilstaf, Inc. v. CVS Caremark Corp., 669 F.3d 7 1005, 1016 n.9 (9th Cir. 2012).

8 Under Rule 56, the Court “shall grant summary judgment if the movant shows that 9 there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment 10 as a matter of law.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). The moving party may do so simply “by 11 ‘showing’—that is, pointing out to the district court—that there is an absence of evidence 12 to support the nonmoving party’s case.” Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 325 13 (1986). To defeat summary judgment, a plaintiff must do more than establish the “mere 14 existence of a scintilla of evidence” in his favor. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S.
15 242, 252 (1986). Rather, “plaintiffs must produce sufficient evidence to establish the 16 existence of every essential element of their case on which they will bear the burden of 17 proof at trial.” River City Markets, Inc. v. Fleming Foods West, Inc., 960 F.2d 1458, 18 1462 (9th Cir. 1992) (citation omitted).

19 ARGUMENT

20 I. THE BORDER PATROL’S POLICY IS CONSISTENT WITH THE FIRST AMENDMENT.

21 The Court’s “determination that [the Border Patrol’s] policy is a valid time, place, 22 and manner restriction on speech,” slip op. at 19, fully resolves Plaintiffs’ “unlawful 23 regulation” claim in Count One. It directly resolves the portion of Count One alleging an 24 infringement of the right to monitor, to which Plaintiffs purported to limit their 25 preliminary injunction motion. It likewise resolves the remainder of Count One, alleging 26 an infringement of the right to protest—which, under forum analysis, should be treated 27 no differently. Indeed, to allow “more than 100” protesters within the checkpoint—not to 28 mention their picket signs, banners, and speeches, Compl. ¶ 36—would be even more

1 dangerous to public safety and disruptive to law enforcement than to allow monitoring.
2 Moreover, it would be untenable to allow protesting but disallow monitoring, which 3 would effectively replace the current policy, which the Court has found to be “content 4 neutral,” slip op. at 16, with one that is explicitly content-based.<sup>2</sup>

5 Thus, Count One should be dismissed for failure to state a claim, based on the 6 deficiencies in the complaint, the documents incorporated into the complaint by 7 reference, and judicially noticeable materials.<sup>3</sup> In the alternative, should the Court deny 8 Defendants’ motion to dismiss or rely on other materials, it should grant summary
9 judgment to Defendants on Count One.<sup>4</sup>

10 _____
11 <sup>2</sup> Plaintiffs also assert a First Amendment right to record law enforcement officers 12 discharging their duties. Although some courts have recognized such a right, the Ninth 13 Circuit has not directly addressed whether recording for that purpose is an expressive 14 activity, with any restrictions subject to forum analysis, or a monitoring activity, with 15 restrictions subject to right-of-access analysis. See Kelly v. Borough of Carlisle, 622
16 F.3d 248, 262 (3rd Cir. 2010) (noting uncertainty); Leigh v. Salazar, 677 F.3d 892, 894, 17 898 & n.3 (9th Cir. 2012) (applying right-of-access analysis, rather than forum analysis, 18 to photojournalist’s request for access to horse gather to improve government oversight 19 and accountability); cf. Glik v. Cunniffe, 655 F.3d 78, 84 (1st Cir. 2011) (acknowledging 20 First Amendment right to film matters of public interest “subject to reasonable time, 21 place, and manner restrictions”). Regardless, Plaintiffs cannot prevail under either test.

22 <sup>3</sup> The Court “may take judicial notice of ‘records and reports of administrative bodies’”
23 such as CBP, the GAO, and the NTSB, Mack v. South Bay Beer Distributors, Inc., 798
24 F.2d 1279, 1282 (9th Cir. 1986), as well as press releases, Arce v. Douglas, 793 F.3d 968, 25 975 (9th Cir. 2015), newspaper articles, Dockray v. Phelps Dodge Corp., 801 F.2d 1149, 26 1153 (9th Cir. 1986), and “map[s] and satellite image[s] . . . whose accuracy cannot 27 reasonably be questioned,” McCormack v. Hiedeman, 694 F.3d 1004, 1008 (9th Cir.
28 2012).

<sup>4</sup> In opposing Plaintiffs’ preliminary injunction motion, the government submitted, and the Court considered, material outside of the pleadings. But the Court could have reached the same legal conclusions by relying only on the complaint, the documents incorporated into the complaint by reference, and judicially noticeable materials. Indeed, for the most part, it did so. While the Court’s description of the factual background referred to the declarations of several Border Patrol agents, see slip op. at 1-4 & n.1, those declarations tell the same story as Plaintiffs’ allegations, which are taken as true here, see supra at 2-9. And although the Court’s legal analysis cited agent San Martin’s

1           A.     Border Patrol Checkpoints Are Nonpublic Fora

2           In resolving Plaintiffs’ preliminary injunction motion, the Court concluded that it
3 need not resolve the status of the forum to deny relief. Slip op. at 14. The same is true 4 here. Nevertheless, should the Court find it necessary to address the issue, it should 5 conclude that Border Patrol checkpoints—like airport security checkpoints, police 6 stations, and highway rest stops—are nonpublic fora, where restrictions on expressive 7 activity are subject to a lenient degree of scrutiny.

8           When assessing the constitutionality of a restriction on expressive activity, the 9 degree of judicial scrutiny depends on the type of forum at issue. “[P]ublic property fits 10 into one of three main categories: (1) a public forum, (2) a designated public forum, or 11 (3) a nonpublic forum.” Ctr. for Bio-Ethical Reform v. City & Cnty. of Honolulu, 455 12 F.3d at 910, 919 (9th Cir. 2006) (citation omitted). “On one end of the fora spectrum lies 13 the traditional public forum, ‘places which by long tradition . . . have been devoted to 14 assembly and debate,’” Flint v. Dennison, 488 F.3d 816, 830 (9th Cir. 2007) (citation 15 omitted), such as parks and sidewalks, where content-neutral restrictions on speech are 16 subject to “‘an intermediate level of scrutiny,’” Int’l Soc’y for Krishna Consciousness of 17 Cal. (“ISKCON”) v. City of Los Angeles, 764 F.3d 1044, 1049 (9th Cir. 2014) (citation 18 omitted). “Next on the spectrum is the so-called designated public forum, ‘which exists 19 when the government intentionally dedicates its property to expressive conduct.’” Flint, 20 488 F.3d at 830 (citation and brackets omitted).

21           “‘At the opposite end of the fora spectrum is the non-public forum,’” which is “‘any 22 public property that is not by tradition or designation a forum for public 23 communication.’” Id. (citation and brackets omitted). “Examples of nonpublic fora

25 declaration in support of its conclusion that the Border Patrol’s public safety concerns 26 were not speculative, slip op. at 15, 18, the same conclusion could have been drawn as a 27 matter of law. See infra at 15-20 (citing, e.g., Kelly v. Borough of Carlisle, 622 F.3d 248, 28 262 (3rd Cir. 2010) (traffic stops are “inherently dangerous”); Brown v. Cal. Dep’t of Transp., 321 F.3d 1217, 1222 (9th Cir. 2003) (signs along highways “invariably . . . pos[e] safety risks”)).

1 include airport terminals, highway overpass fences, and interstate rest stop areas
2 (including perimeter walkways),” Ctr. for Bio-Ethical Reform, 455 F.3d at 919 (citations
3 omitted), as well as military installations, Greer v. Spock, 424 U.S. 828, 838 (1976), 4 police stations, First Def. Legal Aid v. City of Chicago, 319 F.3d 967, 968 (7th Cir.
5 2003), judicial and municipal complexes, Sammartano v. 1st Judicial Dist. Ct., 303 F.3d
6 959, 966 (9th Cir. 2002), and Transportation and Security Administration (“TSA”) 7 screening checkpoints, Mocek v. City of Albuquerque, 3 F. Supp. 3d 1002, 1070-71
8 (D.N.M. 2014). In nonpublic fora, “restrictions on speech need ‘survive only a much 9 more limited review.’” ISKCON, 764 F.3d at 1049 (citation omitted).

10 In determining a property’s forum status, the Ninth Circuit looks to three factors: 11 (1) “the actual use and purposes of the property”; (2) “the area’s physical characteristics, 12 including its location and the existence of clear boundaries delimiting the area”; and 13 (3) “traditional or historic use of both the property in question and other similar 14 properties.” Wright, 665 F.3d at 1135 (citation omitted). Each factor indicates that 15 Border Patrol checkpoints are nonpublic fora.

16 First, the “actual use and purpose” of a Border Patrol checkpoint is to secure the 17 nation’s borders and to enforce its immigration laws, not to facilitate expressive activity.
18 The Supreme Court has explicitly recognized that checkpoints are a “necessary” 19 component of the Border Patrol’s enforcement strategy, and that the need for them is 20 “great.” Martinez-Fuerte, 428 U.S. at 556-57. The “crucial question,” then, “is whether 21 the manner of expression is basically incompatible with the normal activity of a particular 22 place at a particular time.” Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 116 (1972).
23 There can be little doubt that staging protests inside Border Patrol checkpoints, just 20 24 feet away from agents performing their duties, is incompatible with their purpose.

25 The “federal workplace, like any place of employment, exists to accomplish the 26 business of the employer.” Cornelius v. NAACP Legal Def. & Educ. Fund, 473 U.S.
27 788, 805 (1985). “It follows that the Government has the right to exercise control over 28 access to the federal workplace in order to avoid interruptions to the performance of the 1 duties of its employees.” Id. at 805-06. While Plaintiffs assert that their activities have 2 never disrupted Border Patrol operations, see Compl. ¶ 73, their own allegations show

3 otherwise. PHP’s first rally at the checkpoint, with more than 100 protesters, was so 4 large that the checkpoint was shut down for safety reasons. On the first day of 5 monitoring, PHP members thrice refused Border Patrol agents’ orders to leave the 6 interior of the checkpoint, diverting agents from their duties for two and a half hours.
7 And on the second day of monitoring, PHP members simply ignored the cordons and 8 entered the checkpoint, again diverting agents from their duties. Much like “the business 9 of a military installation . . . [is] to train soldiers, not to provide a public forum,” Greer, 10 424 U.S. at 838, the purpose of a checkpoint is to ensure the Border Patrol’s ability to 11 enforce border security, not to facilitate expressive activities—particularly when those 12 activities distract government employees from their mission. See also Preminger v.
13 Principi, 422 F.3d 815, 824 (9th Cir. 2005) (“purpose of [Veterans Affairs facility] is not 14 to facilitate public discourse”); Sammartano, 303 F.3d at 966 (municipal complex “built 15 . . . for the purpose of conducting the business of the county”); Mocek, 3 F. Supp. 3d at 16 1071 (“purpose of [TSA] screening checkpoint is the facilitation of passenger safety”); 17 cf. Adderley v. Florida, 385 U.S. 39, 41 (1966) (“Jails, built for security purposes, are 18 not” generally “open to the public.”).

19 Moreover, allowing protesters—and their signs and banners—inside Border Patrol 20 checkpoints would endanger agents, motorists, and the protesters themselves. For one 21 thing, they would distract drivers, increasing the risk of accidents. Highway “overpass 22 fences are not ‘compatible’ with expressive activity because messages displayed 23 invariably distract drivers, thereby posing safety risks.” Brown v. Cal. Dep’t of Transp., 24 321 F.3d 1217, 1222 (9th Cir. 2003); see also City of Ladue v. Gilleo, 512 U.S. 43, 48 25 (1994) (“signs take up space and may obstruct views[ and] distract motorists”). The 26 same is true of Border Patrol checkpoints, where the existing signage is calibrated to 27 provide clear warnings without overloading drivers with information. These traffic 28 controls were implemented in response to the National Transportation Safety Board’s

1 (“NTSB”) admonition, following a pair of fatal checkpoint crashes in 2004, that “many 2 safety signs are not noticed in situations of high visible clutter.” NTSB, Urgent Safety
3 Recommendation, H-04-34, at 7 (Oct. 21, 2004), available at [http://www.nts.gov/
4 safety/safety-recs/recletters/H04\_34.pdf](http://www.nts.gov/safety/safety-recs/recletters/H04_34.pdf).

5 These safety concerns are magnified at tactical checkpoints, like the one on 6 Arivaca Road, where Border Patrol agents are working directly in the roadway, without 7 concrete barriers to protect them from traffic. See GAO at 8. Westbound motorists often 8 fail to slow to the speed limit in that direction and, when Border Patrol vehicles are not 9 parked on the northern shoulder, attempt to avoid the rumble strips by driving onto the 10 roadside, where Plaintiffs wish to stand. In addition, anyone on the northern roadside 11 would be directly behind the agent manning the primary inspection area, out of his line of 12 sight, which is at odds with standard weapon-retention techniques. San Martin Decl. ¶ 20 13 (Defs.’ SOF ¶ 10).

14 “[T]raffic stops” are “inherently dangerous situations,” Kelly, 622 F.3d at 262, 15 where the “risk of harm . . . is minimized . . . if the officers routinely exercise 16 unquestioned command of the situation,” Arizona v. Johnson, 555 U.S. 323, 330 (2009) 17 (citation omitted). Motorists sometimes fail to yield at checkpoints, or will flee when 18 referred to secondary. San Martin Decl. ¶ 11 (Defs.’ SOF ¶ 8). Some of those motorists 19 are smuggling people or drugs, and will stop at nothing to escape. Allowing protesters 20 within 20 feet of inspection areas would place them directly in the path of both fleeing 21 suspects and agents giving chase, endangering themselves, the agents, other motorists, 22 and interfering with the effective operation of the checkpoint.

23 Second, the “physical characteristics” of Border Patrol checkpoints alert the public 24 that they are entering a “special enclave” that is “not intended for the exercise of First 25 Amendment rights.” Wright, 665 F.3d at 1136. Unlike sidewalks that have been deemed 26 public fora where “indistinguishable” from other parts of an urban pedestrian grid, see 27 United States v. Grace, 461 U.S. 171, 179 (1983), checkpoints are clearly marked with 28 signs and traffic control devices distinguishing them from surrounding areas. Such

1 signs—“Border Patrol Checkpoint Ahead,” “All Vehicles Must Stop,” “K-9 on Duty”— 2 indicate to reasonable observers that they are entering a zone where free passage is 3 limited and expressive activities may be “subject to greater restrictions.” Wright, 665 4 F.3d at 1136 (citation omitted).

5 Third, Border Patrol checkpoints have not “traditionally” or “historically” been 6 open to expressive activity, and Plaintiffs do not allege otherwise. Like highway rest 7 stops, which are nonpublic fora, checkpoints are “relatively modern creations,” akin to 8 “appendages” to the highway system, and are “hardly the kind of public property that has 9 ‘by long tradition . . . been devoted to assembly and debate.’” Jacobsen v. Bonine, 123 10 F.3d 1272, 1274 (9th Cir. 1997) (citation omitted). Moreover, it is not dispositive that the 11 Arivaca checkpoint is located on a county road, as Plaintiffs appear to assume. Although 12 “public streets and sidewalks” have been described as the “archetype” of a traditional 13 public forum, Frisby v. Schultz, 487 U.S. 474, 480 (1988), not every public street or 14 sidewalk is a public forum, see, e.g., Greer, 424 U.S. at 1214 (public streets and 15 sidewalks within military installation are nonpublic fora); Monterey Cnty. Democratic 16 Party Cent. Comm. v. USPS, 812 F.2d 1194, 1197 (9th Cir. 1987) (public sidewalk at 17 post office is nonpublic forum). On the contrary, where a roadway is “not open to 18 unrestricted public use,” it is not the sort of “open thoroughfare” traditionally considered 19 a public forum. Hale v. U.S. Dep’t of Energy, 806 F.2d 910, 915-16 (9th Cir. 1986) 20 (public road patrolled to restrict access to nuclear facility is nonpublic forum).

21 Moreover, Plaintiffs do not allege that the area around the Arivaca checkpoint, in 22 particular, has ever previously been used for expressive activity, so “[t]his is . . . not a 23 case in which the government has attempted to destroy or convert a public forum . . . into 24 a nonpublic forum.” Wright, 665 F.3d at 1137. Regardless, even if the Arivaca 25 checkpoint area were once a public forum, it no longer is. The government may change a 26 property’s forum status by “alter[ing] the objective physical character or uses of the 27 property,” ACLU v. City of Las Vegas, 333 F.3d 1092, 1105 (9th Cir. 2003) (citation 28 omitted)—for example, where the “land containing the roadway has been withdrawn

1 from public use,” id. (quoting Hale, 806 F.2d at 915). Here, the Border Patrol has done 2 just that by establishing a checkpoint along the roadside, with government facilities and 3 clear signage, that has restricted passage along the road for 7 years, with the endorsement
4 of the county government. Plaintiffs’ contention that all roads are created equal in forum 5 analysis is inconsistent with the case law and ignores the function, history, and purpose of 6 the Arivaca checkpoint.

7 B. The Exclusion of Unauthorized Persons from the Interior of Border
8 Patrol Checkpoints is Reasonable and Viewpoint Neutral.

9 Because Border Patrol checkpoints are nonpublic fora, the exclusion of 10 unauthorized persons from their interior “does not violate the First Amendment as long as 11 it is ‘(1) reasonable in light of the purpose served by the forum and (2) viewpoint
12 neutral.’” Ctr. for Bio-Ethical Reform, 455 F.3d at 920 (citation omitted). The Border 13 Patrol’s policy easily satisfies this forgiving standard.

14 1. Border Patrol’s policy is reasonable given the vital interest in 15 securing the nation’s borders.

16 In a nonpublic forum, a restriction on expressive activity “‘must fulfill a legitimate 17 need,’” but it “‘need not constitute the least restrictive alternative available.’” Id. at 922 18 (citation omitted). In other words, it “‘need only be reasonable; it need not be the most 19 reasonable or the only reasonable limitation.’” ISKCON v. Lee, 505 U.S. 672, 683
20 (1992) (citation omitted). It cannot reasonably be disputed that the government interests 21 at stake here are legitimate—indeed, strong.

22 The federal government has a “paramount interest in protecting the border,” 23 United States v. Flores-Montano, 541 U.S. 149, 155 (2004), and there is a “substantial 24 public interest in controlling illegal alien traffic by maintaining . . . checkpoint[s],” 25 United States v. Vasquez-Guerrero, 554 F.2d 917, 920 (9th Cir. 1977). Checkpoints are 26 “necessary” to border security, Martinez-Fuerte, 428 U.S. at 556-57, and the government 27 has “wide discretion” to control them “to avoid interruptions to the performance of the 28 duties of its employees,” Cornelius, 473 U.S. at 805-06. In addition, the government has

1 a “strong interest” in ensuring public safety and order, including by regulating traffic and 2 pedestrian safety. Madsen v. Women’s Health Ctr., 512 U.S. 753, 768-69 (1994) 3 (sustaining buffer zone to “ensur[e] that petitioners do not block traffic” and to reduce 4 risk of accident); see also Schenck v. Pro-Choice Network, 519 U.S. 357, 375-76 5 (sustaining buffer zone because of “interaction between cars and protesters”); cf.
6 Members of City Council v. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789, 807 (1984) (clutter 7 caused by “accumulation of signs . . . constitutes a significant substantive evil”).

8 The Border Patrol’s policy reasonably regulates these legitimate interests. To 9 meet this test, the government “need not provide detailed proof that the regulation 10 advances its purported interests.” Ctr. for Bio-Ethical Reform, 455 F.3d at 922. But 11 there is proof aplenty. Indeed, the Border Patrol’s policy is not only reasonable, it is 12 narrowly tailored, as shown below in Part I.C.2.

13 2. Border Patrol’s policy is viewpoint neutral.

14 The Border Patrol’s policy—to restrict access to the checkpoint to authorized 15 persons for official purposes, regardless of their political beliefs, Compl. ¶ 85 & Ex. F—16 is also viewpoint neutral. To begin, nothing in the policy “on its face . . . prohibits 17 speech by particular speakers, thereby suppressing a particular view about a subject,” 18 Menotti v. City of Seattle, 409 F.3d 1113, 1130 n.30 (9th Cir. 2005); on the contrary, the 19 policy is explicitly viewpoint neutral. Moreover, Plaintiffs’ allegations of selective 20 enforcement fail to state a plausible viewpoint discrimination claim. “[W]hen someone 21 challenges a law as viewpoint discriminatory but it is not clear from the face of the law 22 which speakers will be allowed to speak, he must show that he was prevented from 23 speaking while someone espousing another viewpoint was permitted to do so.”
24 McCullen v. Coakley, 134 S. Ct. 2518, 2534 n.4 (2014). Here, while Plaintiffs allege 25 that, on a handful of occasions, others were permitted inside the cordons for various 26 reasons—to traverse the checkpoint on foot, to speak with Border Patrol agents, to 27 conduct a geographical survey for purposes of this litigation—there is no allegation that 28 those individuals were permitted to protest in support of the checkpoints, in opposition to

1 Plaintiffs’ viewpoint. Thus, even if the Border Patrol imperfectly enforced its policy to 2 exclude those without an official reason to be at the checkpoint,<sup>5</sup> it certainly has not 3 endorsed speech advancing only one side of a divisive issue—the hallmark of viewpoint 4 discrimination. See slip op. at 16 (the “message of the speaker is irrelevant” here).

5 C. Even if Checkpoints Were Public Fora, Border Patrol’s Policy Is a 6 Permissible Time, Place, and Manner Restriction.

7 Even in a public forum, “the government may impose reasonable restrictions on 8 the time, place, or manner of protected speech, provided the restrictions ‘[1] are justified 9 without reference to the content of the regulated speech, [2] that they are narrowly 10 tailored to serve a significant governmental interest, and [3] that they leave open ample 11 alternative channels for communication of the information.’” Ward v. Rock Against 12 Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 791 (1989) (citation omitted). Even if Border Patrol checkpoints 13 were public fora, they would still satisfy this “‘intermediate level of scrutiny,’” ISKCON, 14 764 F.3d at 1049, as the Court has already found. Slip op. at 15-19.

15 1. Border Patrol’s policy is content neutral.

16 Border Patrol’s policy to exclude unauthorized persons from checkpoints is 17 “content neutral.” Slip op. at 15; see Ward, 491 U.S. at 791 (“The principal inquiry in 18 determining content neutrality is whether the government has adopted a regulation of 19 speech because of disagreement with the message it conveys.”). First, the policy 20 regulates conduct, not speech. It does not even refer to speech, let alone directly regulate 21 it. See McCullen, 134 S. Ct. at 2531 (policy is content neutral where it “does not draw 22

23 <sup>5</sup> Plaintiffs’ complaint identifies only a handful of such occasions (one of which, 24 involving their own surveyor, operated manifestly to their benefit). Such a small number 25 of allegedly improper actions over the course of 18 months is an inadequate basis for 26 prospective injunctive relief. See Ortega Melendres v. Arpaio, 695 F.3d 990, 998 (9th 27 Cir. 2012) (no standing for prospective injunctive relief absent “‘pattern of officially 28 sanctioned . . . behavior, violative of the plaintiffs’ . . . rights’”) (citation omitted); Hodgers-Durgin v. De La Vina, 199 F.3d 1037, 1042-44 (9th Cir. 1999) (two incidents insufficient to establish pattern of wrongdoing); see also San Martin Decl. ¶¶ 16-19 (describing immediate corrective action taken after one incident).

1 content-based distinctions on its face”). Rather, the policy simply bars entry into the 2 interior of the checkpoint. Whether a person violates the policy “‘depends’ not ‘on what 3 they say’ but simply on where they say it.” Id. (citation omitted).

4 Second, that the policy may have the incidental effect of restricting immigration-5 related speech more than speech on other subjects is immaterial. A “facially neutral law 6 does not become content-based simply because it may disproportionately affect speech 7 on certain topics.” Id. On the contrary, such regulations are considered content neutral 8 when they are “justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech.” Id.
9 (citation omitted). As noted above, Border Patrol’s policy is justified by significant law 10 enforcement and public safety interests—interests that have long been recognized as 11 content neutral. See, e.g., id. (public safety is a content-neutral purpose). Thus, this is 12 not a case where “[e]very objective indication shows that the [policy’s] primary purpose 13 is to restrict speech that opposes” immigration enforcement. Id. (citation omitted).

14 Plaintiffs are also mistaken to suggest that the policy is content based because the 15 Border Patrol erected cordons around the interior of the checkpoint only after Plaintiffs 16 entered it. Governments “‘adopt laws to address the problems that confront them,’” and 17 the “‘First Amendment does not require [them] to regulate for problems that do not 18 exist.’” Id. at 2532 (citation omitted). The Arivaca checkpoint is located on a rural road, 19 between two small towns, with rare pedestrian traffic, and there is nothing to suggest that 20 the area has ever previously been used for expressive activity. The Border Patrol was not 21 required to already have cordons in place for a problem that had not yet presented itself.

22 2. Border Patrol’s policy is narrowly tailored to serve significant 23 governmental interests.

24 As shown above, the government interests at stake are no doubt significant, see 25 supra Part I.B.1—a point that the Court found “undisputed.” Slip op. at 17. The Border 26 Patrol’s policy is narrowly tailored to serve those interests, because it advances an 27 “interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation” and is “not 28 substantially broader than necessary” to achieve that interest. Ward, 491 U.S. at 797-800.

1 Plaintiffs are mistaken to paint the Border Patrol’s policy as arbitrary. Compl.
2 ¶ 93. On the contrary, that policy is grounded in experience, both at the Arivaca 3 checkpoint and elsewhere. Although Plaintiffs assert that their campaign against the 4 checkpoint has never disrupted enforcement activities, in reality they have refused 5 agents’ orders to leave the checkpoint, ignored the cordons, and on one occasion staged a 6 rally so large that the checkpoint was closed for safety reasons—a result they advertised 7 in a press release—giving an opening to smugglers who might wish to circumvent the 8 nearby I-19 checkpoint. In addition, the NTSB expressed concern that confusing signage 9 may have contributed to fatal checkpoint crashes in 2004, and advised that “visible 10 clutter” around checkpoint signage be avoided—a recommendation that the Border Patrol 11 followed in adopting its traffic control plan. Further, while Plaintiffs describe the 12 Arivaca checkpoint as relatively tranquil, they have observed it for only a slice of a single 13 year. In fact, since 2009 there have been at least 28 significant safety incidents at the 14 three checkpoints within the Tucson station, including intoxicated motorists, accidents, 15 failures to yield, and flights from secondary. San Martin Decl. ¶ 10 (Defs.’ SOF ¶ 9).
16 Indeed, in March 2014, a drunk motorist traveling westbound through the Arivaca 17 checkpoint drove off the roadway and crashed into license plate readers located on the 18 northern roadside near the primary inspection area, which Plaintiffs wish to access. Id.
19 Had civilians been permitted inside the checkpoint during such an incident, they would 20 have been directly in harm’s way.

21 It was with such experiences in mind that the Border Patrol set the cordons about 22 150 feet from the center of the checkpoint, Compl. ¶ 53, roughly where the checkpoint’s
23 easternmost and westernmost traffic pylons are fixed. That spot is, by Plaintiffs’ own 24 estimation, just 80 feet away from the secondary inspection area. Cf. Bay Area Peace 25 Navy v. United States, 914 F.2d 1224, 1226 (9th Cir. 1990) (permitting 75-foot (25-yard) 26 “safety and security zone” even “in the absence of . . . a tangible threat to security”); 27 United States v. Griefen, 200 F.3d 1256, 1260 (9th Cir. 2000) (150-foot safety zone 28 around road construction is “[e]minently reasonable”). The Border Patrol’s policy does

1 not affect the ability of Plaintiffs or anyone else outside the checkpoint to speak, picket, 2 leaflet, or engage in any other expressive activity protected by the First Amendment.
3 Plaintiffs’ signs and banners can still be seen from within the checkpoint, prompting 4 motorists to stop and speak with them after passing through the checkpoint. Thus, 5 Plaintiffs remain close enough to deliver their message, but not so close as to interfere
6 with immigration enforcement or public safety. Accordingly, the Border Patrol’s policy 7 is narrowly tailored. It addresses a significant threat to immigration enforcement and 8 public safety while respecting the public’s right to freedom of expression, and arrives at a 9 workable solution—tied to the preexisting footprint of the checkpoint—that is not 10 “substantially broader than necessary to achieve the government’s interest.” Ward, 491 11 U.S. at 800.

12 Plaintiffs insist that Border Patrol could have regulated in a less restrictive fashion.
13 But a content-neutral time, place, or manner restriction—in contrast to a regulation 14 subject to strict scrutiny, see Riley v. Nat’l Fed’n of the Blind, 487 U.S. 781 (1988)—is 15 not “invalid ‘simply because there is some imaginable alternative that might be less 16 burdensome on speech.’” Ward, 491 U.S. at 797-98 (citation omitted). Plaintiffs fail to 17 demonstrate that the Border Patrol’s policy sweeps in substantially more speech than 18 necessary to achieve the government’s goals. They suggest, for example, that either the 19 western cordons be moved eastward, to a spot 20 feet west of the center of the 20 checkpoint, or that they be given essentially unrestricted access to the northern roadway.
21 While that might satisfy Plaintiffs, it would be at the sacrifice of the government’s 22 interests. Whether or not any difficulties would arise if Plaintiffs alone were permitted 23 greater access to protest or monitor is beside the point, because the Border Patrol must 24 account for everyone who might crowd the checkpoint if access were not restricted. See 25 Heffron v. ISKCON, 452 U.S. 640, 653-55 (1981) (criticizing the lower court’s failure to 26 “take into account the fact that any . . . exemption cannot be meaningfully limited to 27 [plaintiff], and as applied to similarly situated groups would prevent the State from 28 furthering its important concern”); Lee, 505 U.S. at 685. Recently, citizen groups

1 supportive of the Border Patrol’s mission erected large signs on private land adjacent to 2 the checkpoint reading “Keep Our BP Checkpoint Open” and “Citizens of Arivaca, 3 Moyza, and Amado Support Our BP Checkpoint.” San Martin Decl. ¶ 8 & Attach. 19-21
4 (Defs.’ SOF ¶ 25). Imagine that these groups were to stage a counter-protest in support
5 of the Arivaca checkpoint. Unless the checkpoint could function safely and effectively 6 while hosting both protests, not to mention other demonstrations on other topics—and it 7 could not—it must function without hosting any.

8 3. Border Patrol’s policy leaves open ample alternative channels of 9 communication.

10 The Border Patrol’s policy also “leave[s] open ample alternative channels of 11 communication.” Ward, 491 U.S. at 802. As noted above, the policy does not affect the 12 public’s ability to protest, picket, leaflet or engage in other expressive activity from 13 outside the cordons. And PHP members have done just that, with considerable success 14 in reaching their intended audience. From the western cordons, they have handed out 15 “know your rights” fliers to motorists entering the checkpoint. San Martin Decl. ¶ 22 16 (Defs.’ SOF ¶ 24). From the eastern cordons, they often flag down motorists leaving the 17 checkpoint to discuss their views. Id. They have collected data on the perceived race of 18 individuals who (a) passed through the checkpoint; (b) showed agents some form of 19 identification; (c) were referred to secondary; or (d) were the subject of canine alerts, as 20 their own report demonstrates. See PHP, Community Report, at 21 <http://phparivaca.org/?p=567>. They have attracted significant media attention to their 22 cause. See http://phparivaca.org/?page\_id=252 (listing more than 50 articles); Fernanda
23 Santos, Border Patrol Scrutiny Stirs Anger in Arizona Town, N.Y. Times, June 27, 2014, 24 at A13. And they have announced that their campaign is “absolutely deterring abuse, a 25 primary goal,” among other accomplishments. See <http://phparivaca.org/?p=536>.

26 Thus, contrary to Plaintiffs’ contention, this is not a case in which “[t]he 27 alternatives . . . are far from satisfactory.” Linmark Assocs., Inc. v. Willingboro Tp., 431 28 U.S. 85, 93-94 (1977). Rather, the alternatives available here reach precisely the same

1 “audience,” and provide a good “opportunity” to “win the[] attention” of that audience, 2 Kovacs v. Cooper, 336 U.S. 77, 86-87 (1949) (plurality opinion)—without forcing 3 Plaintiffs to convey “a message quite distinct from” the one that they would deliver if 4 they could enter the interior of the checkpoint, Gilleo, 512 U.S. at 56-57. Indeed, those 5 alternatives are in every meaningful way a “practical substitute” for the narrow channel 6 that the Border Patrol’s policy has foreclosed. Id. at 57.

7 Plaintiffs nevertheless argue that no possible alternatives can substitute for the 8 ability to access the heart of the checkpoint and to stand just 20 feet away from Border 9 Patrol agents performing their duties. But it is well established that a time, place, or 10 manner restriction will not be invalidated simply because it denies a speaker his or her 11 preferred or even the most effective means of communication. Adderley, 385 U.S. at 47-12 48. It could hardly be otherwise. If an alternative channel of communication were 13 required to be a perfect substitute for the restricted one, then no time, place, or manner 14 restriction would ever be upheld. See Clark v. Cmty. Creative Non-Violence, 15 468 U.S. 288, 291-97 (1984) (“reasonable time, place, or manner regulations normally 16 have the purpose and direct effect of limiting expression”); Kovacs, 336 U.S. at 88 17 (plurality opinion) (upholding restriction on amplification though “more people may be 18 more easily and cheaply reached by sound trucks”). No doubt protesters outside schools, 19 funerals, political conventions, courthouses, and meetings of international leaders could 20 often convey their messages most effectively unhampered by any time, place, or manner 21 restrictions. Yet courts have deemed such restrictions constitutional, on the ground that 22 ample communicative alternatives remain. See, e.g., Bl(a)ck Tea Soc’y v. City Of 23 Boston, 378 F.3d 8, 14-15 (1st Cir. 2004). The same result is appropriate here.

24 II. PLAINTIFFS’ RETALIATION CLAIM IS MERITLESS.

25 In Count Two, Plaintiffs assert that the Border Patrol has “retaliated” against them 26 in response to “constitutionally protected speech.” Id. ¶¶ 110-13. They allege that, on 27 “multiple” occasions, Border Patrol agents parked vehicles beside the cordons “for the 28 purpose of obstructing the monitors’ view,” id. ¶ 70, and that, on two such occasions,

1 agents left the vehicles running, “with exhaust fumes directed at the monitors,” id. ¶ 71.
2 The complaint does not specify when these alleged incidents took place, other than 3 sometime “following the initiation” of PHP’s monitoring campaign, id. ¶ 70. But the first 4 appears to have been on March 1, 2014, after several PHP members ignored the cordons, 5 entered the checkpoint, and refused to leave for more than an hour. Id. ¶¶ 59-64.

6 These allegations fail to state a retaliation claim. To begin, because the Border
7 Patrol’s policy is valid under the First Amendment, it infringes on no protected speech, 8 so no retaliation claim can lie. The complaint itself shows that Plaintiffs’ view was not 9 materially obstructed, see Compl. Ex. D, a fact confirmed by their success in collecting 10 data. Regardless, there is no support for the notion that the Border Patrol’s actions were 11 intended to punish Plaintiffs for expressing their views, rather than simply to keep the 12 checkpoint clear after PHP members repeatedly entered it and refused to leave. But the 13 Court need not reach the merits of this claim, because it also fails for an independent, 14 threshold reason: Plaintiffs lack standing to seek prospective injunctive relief.

15 A. Plaintiffs Lack Standing to Seek Prospective Injunctive Relief.

16 Because Plaintiffs cannot demonstrate that any alleged retaliation is likely to recur
17 in the future, they lack standing to seek prospective injunctive relief. To establish Article 18 III standing, Plaintiffs must demonstrate the familiar elements of: (1) an injury in fact; 19 (2) causation; and (3) redressability. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-
20 61 (1992). Moreover, to obtain prospective injunctive relief—the only type of relief 21 sought for their retaliation claim—it is not enough to allege a past injury. City of Los 22 Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95, 102 (1983); O’Shea v. Littleton, 414 U.S. 488, 495-96 23 (1973) (“Past exposure to illegal conduct does not in itself show a present case or 24 controversy regarding injunctive relief . . . if unaccompanied by any continuing, present 25 adverse effects.”). Rather, Plaintiffs must demonstrate that they face a “real and 26 immediate threat” of future harm, Lyons, 461 U.S. at 102, that is “certainly impending,” 27 Whitmore v. Arkansas, 495 U.S. 149, 158 (1990); Daimler Chrysler Corp. v. Cuno, 547 28 U.S. 332, 345 (2006). The necessary facts “must affirmatively appear in the record” and 1 “cannot be inferred argumentatively from averments in the pleadings.” FW/PBS Inc. v.

2 Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 231 (1990).

3 Here, Plaintiffs cannot establish—and do not even allege—that any supposed 4 retaliation is likely to recur in the future. Instead, they offer only the vague allegation 5 that Border Patrol agents parked vehicles beside the cordons on “multiple” occasions, 6 without specifying any dates. Compl. ¶¶ 70-71. As agent San Martin has explained, he 7 ordered agents to reinforce the cordons with vehicles as a standard crowd-control
8 measure, but relaxed that order on March 12, 2014, after PHP members agreed to respect 9 the cordons. San Martin Decl. ¶ 14-15. Plaintiffs filed their complaint some 9 months 10 later, and although they allegedly “continue[d]” to monitor the checkpoint, see, e.g., 11 Compl. ¶ 9, they fail to allege any later instances of supposed retaliation.

12 Accordingly, Plaintiffs fail to show any future threat—let alone an “immediate” or 13 “certain” one—that the Border Patrol will retaliate against Plaintiffs in response to their 14 monitoring or protesting activities. See Lyons, 461 U.S. at 102; Whitmore, 495 U.S. at 15 158. Thus, Plaintiffs lack standing to seek injunctive relief for this claim.<sup>6</sup>

---

17
18 <sup>6</sup> Moreover, the vague injunction that Plaintiffs propose would not redress any concrete 19 injury. Plaintiffs seek an injunction that would prevent the Border Patrol from 20 “restricting, impeding, or otherwise interfering with [their] First Amendment rights to 21 protest and record the [Arivaca] checkpoint.” Compl. ¶ A.1-2. In other words, Plaintiffs 22 ask the Court to issue an injunction requiring the Border Patrol not to retaliate against 23 Plaintiffs for exercising their First Amendment rights. But it is well established that such 24 generic “obey the law” injunctions are inappropriate. Keyes v. Sch. Dist. No. 1, 895 F.2d 25 659, 668-69 (10th Cir. 1990). Here, the proposed injunction would redress nothing, for 26 Defendants are, of course, already obligated to comply with the Constitution. See SEC v.
27 Warren, 583 F.2d 115, 121 (3d Cir. 1978) (affirming dissolution of injunction requiring 28 defendants to merely “obey the law” in the future, “a requirement with which they must comply regardless of the injunction”). Moreover, such an injunction could not be squared with Rule 65(d), which requires that every injunction must “state its terms specifically” and “describe in reasonable detail . . . the act or acts restrained or required.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(d)(1)(B)-(C); see Keyes, 895 F.2d at 668 & n.5 (striking an injunction requiring defendants “to use their expertise and resources to comply with the constitutional requirement of equal education opportunity for all”).

1           B. Plaintiffs Fail to State a Retaliation Claim.

2           Even if the Court had jurisdiction over Plaintiffs' retaliation claim, it should be 3 dismissed for failure to state a claim. Plaintiffs suggest that the Border Patrol parked 4 vehicles beside the cordons not as a crowd control measure but, instead, to punish 5 Plaintiffs for monitoring and protesting in the first place. But their speculation about the 6 Border Patrol's motives is insufficient to make out a retaliation claim.

7           To state a First Amendment retaliation claim, a plaintiff must demonstrate (1) that 8 he was engaged in protected First Amendment activity; (2) that the defendant's conduct 9 would deter a person of ordinary firmness from continuing to engage in the protected 10 activity; and (3) that deterring the plaintiff was a substantial or motivating factor in the 11 defendant's conduct. See Mendocino Env'tl. Ctr. v. Mendocino Cnty., 192 F.3d 1283, 12 1300 (9th Cir. 1999). Plaintiffs' claim falls short at each step.

13                   1. Plaintiffs' attempts to monitor or protest from within the 14                   checkpoint are not protected First Amendment activity.

15           Plaintiffs' contention that the Border Patrol retaliated against them for attempting 16 to monitor or protest from within the checkpoint fails at the outset because, as the Court
17 has found, those efforts were not protected under the First Amendment. The Ninth 18 Circuit's decision in Blomquist v. Town of Marana, 501 F. App'x 657 (9th Cir. 2012), is 19 instructive. In rejecting a similar retaliation claim, the court explained that, "[b]ecause 20 Plaintiffs lacked a First Amendment right to picket or otherwise occupy the site of the 21 abandoned easement, they cannot establish that the individual defendants questioned, 22 cited, or arrested them in retaliation for the exercise of their federal constitutional rights."
23 Id. at 659. So too here. Because the Border Patrol's policy is a valid time, place, and 24 manner restriction, Plaintiffs lacked a First Amendment right to protest or monitor from 25 within the checkpoint. Thus, they cannot establish that the Border Patrol retaliated 26 against them for attempting to do so. See id.; see also, e.g., Carreon v. Ill. Dep't of 27 Human Servs., 395 F.3d 786, 797 (7th Cir. 2005) (rejecting retaliation claim where 28 "defendants were free to exclude [the plaintiff's] attorney" from the forum and, therefore,

1 the plaintiff had “not established that he engaged in conduct protected by his rights of 2 speech or association”); Watkins v. U.S. Postal Empl., 611 F. App’x 549 & n.2 (11th 3 Cir. 2015) (where policy was “a reasonable restriction on expression” the court “need not 4 address the additional requirements of a First Amendment retaliation claim”).<sup>7</sup>

5 2. Border Patrol’s supposedly retaliatory actions would not deter a 6 person of reasonable firmness—and did not, in fact, deter
7 Plaintiffs.

8 Even assuming that Plaintiffs were engaged in protected First Amendment 9 activity, they cannot show that the Border Patrol’s supposedly retaliatory actions—10 parking vehicles beside the cordons—would deter a person of reasonable firmness from 11 exercising his First Amendment rights. For “retaliatory actions to offend the First 12 Amendment, they must be of a nature that would stifle someone from speaking out.” 13 Blair v. Bethel Sch. Dist., 608 F.3d 540, 544 (9th Cir. 2010). The “most familiar” such 14 actions are “‘exercises of government power’ that are ‘regulatory, proscriptive, or 15 compulsory in nature’ and have the effect of punishing someone for his or her speech.”
16 Id. (citation omitted). Here, however, it is difficult to fathom how the Border Patrol’s use 17 of such a routine crowd-control technique would deter any reasonable person from 18 engaging in protected activity. Certainly, it did not deter Plaintiffs.

19 Although Plaintiffs allege that their view of the checkpoint was obstructed, 20 Compl. ¶¶ 70, 87, the photographs attached to their complaint show otherwise. See id.
21 Ex. D (primary and secondary inspection areas visible despite Border Patrol vehicle 22 beside cordons). Moreover, while Plaintiffs allege that the Border Patrol twice left

23
24 <sup>7</sup> For the same reason, Plaintiffs’ allegation that they were threatened with arrest after 25 refusing to leave the interior of the checkpoint, Compl. ¶¶ 54-55, 62-63, fails to state a 26 retaliation claim. Because Plaintiffs were not engaged in protected First Amendment 27 activity inside the checkpoint, any threats of arrest could not have been retaliatory. See 28 Blomquist, 501 F. App’x at 659; see also Corales v. Bennett, 567 F.3d 554, 565 (9th Cir.
2009) (“Under Ninth Circuit law, Plaintiffs do not have a retaliation claim based on threats of discipline for First Amendment activity if that threat is itself based upon lawful consequences and is not actually administered.”).

1 vehicles running beside the cordons, allegedly exposing monitors to exhaust fumes, id.
2 ¶ 71, nowhere do they allege any physical harm resulting from such exposure, and it is 3 difficult to imagine how exposure to an incidental level of vehicle exhaust could be 4 anything other than the sort of “de minimis” inconvenience that simply “do[es] not give 5 rise to a First Amendment claim.” Blair, 608 F.3d at 544. The Arivaca checkpoint is “in 6 a rural area surrounded by farmland and private residences” “where traffic is minimal,” 7 Compl. ¶¶ 28, 30, and there is unlimited room behind the cordons for Plaintiffs to gather.
8 In such a wide open space, the effect of exhaust fumes from a single vehicle—left 9 running on only two occasions—would be negligible.

10         It is therefore unsurprising that Plaintiffs do not allege that the presence of Border 11 Patrol vehicles has, in fact, deterred them from protesting or monitoring the checkpoint.
12 To be sure, a plaintiff need not show that his own speech was actually inhibited, but only 13 that the speech of a “person of ordinary firmness” would have been. Lacey v. Maricopa 14 Cty., 693 F.3d 896, 917 (9th Cir. 2012) (citations omitted). Yet courts will still consider 15 whether there was any actual deterrence, even if it is not determinative. See, e.g., Blair, 16 608 F.3d at 544 (“The district court found [that the allegedly retaliatory act] didn’t chill 17 [the plaintiff’s] speech, and the record supports that finding.”). Here, Plaintiffs concede 18 that, despite the occasional presence of Border Patrol vehicles, they “have continued” to 19 protest and monitor the checkpoint. Compl. ¶¶ 67. And although they claim to be unable 20 to view “the full range of actions” of Border Patrol agents from behind the cordons, 21 Plaintiffs themselves explain that this is “because they are restricted to observing from 22 approximately 150 feet away,” id. ¶ 68—a restriction that the Court has found valid.
23 Nowhere do Plaintiffs allege that the presence of Border Patrol vehicles, in particular, has 24 interfered with their ability to monitor the checkpoint, and any such allegation would be 25 contradicted by Plaintiffs’ success in collecting data.

26         Thus, Plaintiffs fail to show that the presence of Border Patrol vehicles actually 27 deterred their own protesting or monitoring activities, and allege no facts from which the 28 Court could conclude that a hypothetical “person of ordinary firmness” would have been

1 affected differently.<sup>8</sup>

2 3. Plaintiffs fail to demonstrate retaliatory intent.

3 In any event, Plaintiffs fail to show that, in parking vehicles beside the cordons,
4 the Border Patrol intended to punish Plaintiffs for exercising their First Amendment 5 rights, rather than simply to block access to the interior of the checkpoint. Their “mere 6 speculation that defendants acted out of retaliation is not sufficient” to state a claim.
7 Wood v. Yordy, 753 F.3d 899, 905 (9th Cir. 2014). To establish retaliatory motive, a 8 plaintiff must show that deterring him from engaging in protected First Amendment
9 activity “was a substantial or motivating factor in [the defendant’s] conduct.” Lacey, 693 10 F.3d at 917. While “retaliatory motive may be shown by circumstantial evidence, such as 11 the timing of the allegedly retaliatory act,” evidence of timing “is not, by itself, sufficient 12 to plausibly suggest retaliatory animus” where “there is an ‘obvious alternative 13 explanation’ for the conduct.” Eberhard v. California Highway Patrol, 73 F. Supp. 3d 14 1122, 1127-28 (N.D. Cal. 2014) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 567).

15 Here, Plaintiffs’ conclusory insinuations about the Border Patrol’s motives for 16 parking vehicles beside the cordons deserve no deference. Plaintiffs baldly allege that the 17 Border Patrol “retaliated against [them] in direct response to their checkpoint monitoring 18 campaign.” Compl. ¶ 70. But they offer no evidence to support that assertion, which is 19 precisely the sort of “‘legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation’” that is 20 “disentitled to th[e] presumption of truth” on a motion to dismiss. Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678.

21 Moreover, in this case, chronology alone is insufficient to plausibly show 22

23 <sup>8</sup> Plaintiffs also allege that, on a single occasion, monitors overheard a Border Patrol 24 agent, during a conversation with a passing motorist, use a profanity in reference to one 25 of the monitors. Id. ¶ 72. While such language is not to be condoned, its use—26 particularly in isolation, as here—would not deter a person of ordinary firmness from 27 exercising his First Amendment rights. See, e.g., Oltarzewski v. Ruggiero, 830 F.2d 136, 28 137-39 (9th Cir. 1987) (use of “excessively vulgar language” insufficient to state First Amendment retaliation claim”); Nunez v. City of Los Angeles, 147 F.3d 867, 875 (9th
Cir. 1998) (“bad-mouth[ing] and verbal threat[s]” insufficient to state First Amendment retaliation claim).

1 retaliatory motive. True enough, the Border Patrol parked vehicles beside the cordons 2 after Plaintiffs entered—and declined to leave—the checkpoint. Compl. ¶¶ 59-64. Yet, 3 as the Supreme Court has explained, “[w]here a complaint pleads facts that are ‘merely 4 consistent with’ a defendant’s liability,” but there is a “more likely” or “‘obvious 5 alternative explanation’” for the defendant’s conduct, then liability is not “plausibly 6 establish[ed]” and the claim must be dismissed. Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678. Here, the 7 complaint itself reveals an “obvious alternative explanation” for the Border Patrol’s 8 actions: to help keep unauthorized persons out of the checkpoint, after they repeatedly 9 refused to respect its boundaries. Compl. ¶¶ 46-52, 59-61. Plaintiffs acknowledge that 10 this was the precisely the explanation that agent San Martin gave at the time. Id. ¶ 77 11 (agent “San Martin acknowledged that Border Patrol vehicles had parked adjacent to the 12 barriers to block ingress”). And the same contemporaneous explanation is reflected in 13 documents attached to the complaint. Id. Ex. C at 2 (email from agent San Martin) (“The 14 vehicles were parked there to provide an additional barrier because some monitors
15 refused to move. If the monitors had moved when the agents asked them to, the vehicles 16 would never have been placed there.”). Thus, both Plaintiffs’ own complaint and 17 common sense point to an obvious, nonretaliatory motive for the Border Patrol’s actions.
18 Plaintiffs’ conclusory assertions to the contrary are insufficient to nudge this claim 19 “across the line from conceivable to plausible.” Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 680.

20 C. Alternatively, the Court Should Grant Summary Judgment to 21 Defendants on Plaintiffs’ Retaliation Claim.

22 The Court should dismiss Plaintiffs’ retaliation claim based on the complaint, the 23 materials incorporated by reference into the complaint, and the judicially noticeable facts 24 discussed above. Should the Court deny Defendants’ motion to dismiss or rely on other 25 materials, however, it should grant summary judgment to Defendants. To prevail on their 26 retaliation claim, Plaintiffs need not only prove each of the elements set forth above—27 none of which they can do, for the reasons already discussed. In addition, Plaintiffs must 28 ultimately “‘prove . . . retaliatory animus as the cause of injury,’ with causation being

1 ‘understood to be but-for causation.’” Lacey, 693 F.3d at 917 (emphasis added); see also 2 Hartman v. Moore, 547 U.S. 250, 260 (2006) (“action colored by some degree of bad 3 motive does not amount to a constitutional tort if that action would have been taken 4 anyway”). They cannot meet this burden.

5 As explained above, Plaintiffs allege no facts to suggest any intent to punish them
6 for their viewpoint, and Border Patrol’s contemporaneous explanations consistently show 7 that the agency was merely trying to prevent unauthorized persons from entering the 8 checkpoint, after they repeatedly refused to respect its boundaries. In his declaration, 9 agent San Martin confirms these explanations, stating that “because the protesters had 10 ignored the cordons and signs,” he ordered agents to park vehicles beside the barriers “to 11 reinforce” them as a crowd-control measure. San Martin Decl. ¶ 14 (Defs.’ SOF ¶¶ 19-12 22). He also explains that he has made several attempts to accommodate PHP 13 members—for example, by relaxing his order to use vehicles to reinforce the cordons, 14 and by relocating a generator-powered lighting unit when PHP members complained 15 about its brightness and fumes, id. ¶ 21 (Defs.’ SOF ¶¶ 22-23)—further undermining the 16 notion that the Border Patrol acted with retaliatory intent.

17 Thus, there is overwhelming evidence that the Border Patrol’s motive in parking 18 vehicles beside the cordons was merely to reinforce those barriers, after they had 19 repeatedly been breached, and not to punish Plaintiffs on the basis of their viewpoint. No 20 reasonable jury could conclude otherwise. If this claim is not dismissed, summary 21 judgment should be granted to Defendants.

22 CONCLUSION

23 For the foregoing reasons, the Court should dismiss this case in its entirety or, in 24 the alternative, grant summary judgment to Defendants on all claims.
